PLOUTARCHOS is the journal of the International Plutarch Society, which exists to further the study of Plutarch and his various writings and to encourage scholarly communication between those working on Plutarchan studies. The Society is constituted of national sections formed by the members of the Society living in each country. The national sections may function as independent units, with their own officers, constitutions and by-laws.

Membership in the society is open to anyone interested in Plutarch and his writings. Annual dues cover one issue of the new series Ploutarchos as follows: Student ($5.00); Individual North American ($10.00); International ($15.00); Institutional ($20.00). Applications for personal membership in the IPS should be sent to the appropriate Section head (except for North American members, who apply directly to the Society).

The Society also maintains a web site (<http://www.usu.edu/~history.plout.htm>) that includes information on member activities, upcoming conferences, recent publications, and the various international sections.

Include information concerning the following items:

1) Structure of the Journal:

a) Long articles.

b) Short notes (still 6/7 pages) about critical questions, literary, linguistic, etc. remarks, etc.

c) Books and articles reviews

d) Some informations about our Society.

2) Other observations that you consider important.
